Albinus, The name of an Emperour. Alſo the ſurname of diuers Romaines.

Albion, and Bergion, Two gigantes the ſonnes of Neptune, ſlaine by Hercules.

Albion, (The moſte auncient name of this Ile) conteineth Englande and Scotlande: of the beginning of which name haue been ſundrie opiniōs: One late feigned by him, whiche firſt prynted the Engliſhe chronicle, wherein is neither ſimilitude of trouth, reaſone, nor honeſtie: I meane the fable of the fiftie doughters of one Diocleſian kyng of Syria, where neuer any other hiſtorie maketh mencion of a kyng of Syria, ſo named. Alſo that name is Greke, and no parte of the language of Syria. Moreouer the coming of theim from Syria in a ſhippe or boate without any marynours thorowe the ſea called Mediterraneum, into the occean, and ſo finally to finde this Ile, and to inhabite it, and haue generation by diuels, is both impoſſible, and much reproche for this noble Realme, to aſcribe hir firſt name and habitation, to ſuche inuentours. An other opinion is (whiche hath a more honeſte ſimilitude) that it was named Albion, ab albis rupibus, of white rockes, becauſe that vnto them, that come by ſea, from the eaſt or ſouthe, the bankes and rockes of this Ile doe appeare whyte. Of this opinion haue I moſte meruayle, becauſe it is written of great learned men. Firſt Albion is no latin worde, nor hath the analogie, that is to ſaie, the proportion or ſimilitude of latine. For who hath founde this ſyllable, on, at the ende of a latin word. And if it ſhould haue been ſo called for the whyte colour of the rockes, men would haue called called it Alba, or Albus, or Album. In Italy were townes called Alba, and in Aſia a countrey called Albania, and neither of them tooke their beginning of white rockes or walles, as ye may reade in bookes of Geographie: nor the water of the ryuer called Albis, ſemeth any whiter than other water. But if where auncient remembraunce of the beginning of thinges lacketh, it may be leefull for men to vſe their coniectures, than may myne be as well accepted as Plinies (although he incomparably excelled me in wiſedome & doctrine) ſpecially if it may appere, that my cōiecture ſhal approch more nere to the ſimilitude of trouth. Wherfore I will alſo ſette forth mine opinion, onely to the intent to exclude fables, lackyng eyther honeſtie or reaſonable ſimilitudes. Whan the Greekes began firſt to proſper, and their cities became populous, & waxed puiſſaunt, they which trauailed on the ſeas, and alſo the yles in the ſeas, called Helleſpontus, Aegeum, and Creticū, after that thei knewe perfectly the courſe of ſaillynge, and had founden therby profyte, they by little and little attempted to ſerche & finde out the commodities of outwarde countrees: and like as Spaniardes & Portugalles haue late done, they experienced to ſeke out countreis before vnknowen. And at laſte paſſyng the ſtreictes of Marrocke, they entred into the great Occean ſea, where they foūd dyuers and many Iles. Among which they perceiuing this Ile to be not onely the greatteſt in circuite, but alſo moſt plentuouſe of euery thing neceſſary to man, the ayre moſt holſome and tēperate, the earth moſte apte to bringe forth all thinges that maie ſuſteine, the fleſhe of beoffes and muttons moſt ſwete and delicate, the wull moſte fine, not lacking any kinde of mettal, hauyng abundance of wodde and timber to builde with, alſo great & fayre riuers, with great lakes or meres of freſhe water, and as well in them as in the ſea, wherwith the countrey is enuyroned, was great plentie of fiſhes, of diuers ſortes moſte apt to be eaten: they wonderynge & reioyſinge at their good and fortunate arriuall, named this yle in greke Olbion, which in engliſhe ſignifieth happy, in latine Fœlix, like as part of Arabia, which is moſt fertile, is called Arabia fœlix. But in proceſſe of time, by reſort of ſundrie people hauing diuers languages, no meruayle though one letter were chaunged, & the firſt letter, O, turned into A. And ſo for Olbion, it was at the laſte called Albion, which worde hath no maner of ſignification. This chaunging of letters is not vnlikely, ſence at this preſente time the northern men of this realme do vſe A, in wordes, where ſouthern men vſe O, as a bane, a ſtane, a bare, a band: for a bone, a ſtone, a bore, a bond. And among the Grekes were like alterations of letters. And it may be more eaſily borne, ẏ one vowel may be chaunged in a word, eſpecially A, into O, whiche in ſomme mans mouth, ſowneth often times like, thā that a ſyllable impertinent to the proportion of latine, ſhould be vnaptly added to. Not withſtandynge Pomponius Mela maketh mention of a gyaunt called Albion, whom Hercules ſlewe in Gallia, which was ſonne of Neptunus, who moughte with more reaſō be demed the firſt geuer of this name to this yle, than that the other ſurmiſes ſhould be likely. If any man can finde mattier more certaine, concerning the beginning of this Ile, I wyll not be offended, but congratulate with him his good fortune and diligence.

Ariſtides, A noble man of Athens, in wyſedome, iuſtice, and temperance, excellent. He in the gouernaūce of the common weale of Athens, was ioygned with Themiſtocles, a mā of great proweſſe and ryches, who ſayed in the counſayle, he knew a thyng, whiche was expedient to the common weale, but not neceſſary to be openly knowen, and deſyred to haue one appoynted, to whom he ſhould diſcloſe it. The counſayle appoynted Ariſtides: to whome he ſhewed, that the nauye of the Lacedemonians mought bee ſhortly ſette on fyre, and ſo ſhould theyr puyſſaunce bee abated. This hearde, Ariſtides retourned to the counſayle, and ſayed: The aduiſe of Themiſtocles is profitable, but not honeſt. The Athenienſes hearinge it was not honeſt, iudged, it mought not bee profitable, and woulde not haue it than diſcloſed. Suche credence hadde they in Ariſtides. Alſo not withſtanding the Athenienſes had exiled hym, onely becauſe he excelled in iuſtice, yet at his departing he praied to God, that what ſo euer thei deſired, mought come to good effecte and concluſion. And called agayne from exyle, he neuer remembred anye olde diſpleaſure, in ſo muche that he alwaye honoured Themiſtocles, with whom he euer contended in the weale publyke. Of hys temperance this is a great token, that though he had ben in the greateſt dignitie and offices in the commune weale, ye died he ſo poore, that he left not to bury him worſhipfully. And his daughters were maried at the charge of the citie. And to his ſonne Liſymachus was giuen by the people one hundred Minæ, which amounteth of our money to.239. pounde.xi.s.viij.d. Oh, howe may chriſten men be aſhamed, when they reade this ſtory, beholding in his temperaunce, iuſtice and charitie, a more reſemblance of Chriſtes doctrine, than is in them that wyll doe nothynge vnhyred, and meaſure iuſtice by their affections. In the way, when certayn of his companie, would haue rauiſhed the maydens, he firſt, ſo muche as he coulde, aduertiſed them not to worke that villanie: but whã their rage would not bee ſtaied by any counſayle, he kylled certayne of them, and by that terrour repreſſed the other. Not longe after, when the maydens weare raunſommed and ſent for home, they perceiuyng Ariſtomenes to bee accuſed for the death of thoſe, that in their defence he hadde ſlayne, would not in any wyſe retourne to their countrey, but continually laye proſtrate at the iudges feete, vntyll they hadde obteined pardon for the defendour and preſeruour of their chaſtitie. This Ariſtomenes was of wytte ſo ſubtile and craftie, that ſundry tymes he entred as a ſpie into the citie of Lacedemon, and beynge once or twyſe taken and caſt in pryſon, eſcaped the daunger. At the laſt beyng put to death, and his body opened, his hearte was founde to bee hearie.

He excelled all men in ſharpeneſſe of witte and knowledge in diuers ſciences: wherfore kyng Philip of Macedonie ſent him his ſonne Alexander to teache, ſaiyng: He thanked God, that he had a ſonne borne in his tyme. This man began a ſecte, the folowers whereof were called Peripatetici. He taught after Platos death. xxiiij. yeres. He was banyſſhed out of Athenes, becauſe it was ſuppoſed, he deemed not well of theyr goddes. It is wrytten that he died by this occaſion. As he went by the ſea ſyde, he perceiued fiſſhermen ſittyng and doynge of ſomewhat. And whan he aſked what they dyd, they tolde hym a ryddell, which whan by long ſtudy, he could not aſſoyle: for ſhame and ſorowe he died. Of hym Quintilian wryteth thus. What ſay you by Ariſtotle, whom I wote not whether I may iudge more excellent in knowledge of thynges, in aboundaunce of wrytyng, in ſweteneſſe of eloquence, in ſharpnes of wit, or els in diuerſitie of workes. Britannia, The moſte noble Ile of the worlde, wherin be conteined Englande and Scotlande. It lieth from Germany weſte: from Fraunce and Spayne, weſt northweſte. The fourme thereof is like a triangle, and (as ſome haue writtē) like the blade of a gleyue. The lengthe is extended into the North to the furthermoſt part of Scotlande, called Caliſonia, which Plinius, Solinus, and Martianus, doe agree to be.800.miles. The bredth of it (after Martianus) is. 300. Italyan myles. The narroweſt dyſtaunce betwene this yle and Caleys ſandes (called of Plinie Geſſoriacum in Gallia) is.50. Italyan myles. It is nowe geſſed to be.30.engliſhe myles. Of the firſte naming of this yle is yet no certain determinatiō, for aſmuch as there remayneth no auncient hiſtory, making thereof remembraunce, the olde Brytons bookes (ſuche as weare) beynge all deſtroyed by the Saxons: who indeuoured them ſelfe to extinct vtterly the honorable renoume wᵗ the name of Brytons, lyke as the Gothes delte with the Romains. Alſo the part of Titus Liuius, where the conqueſt of Brytayne is remembred, with the hiſtories of Julius Ruſticus, & dyuers other noble wryters, that wrate ſpecially of this countrey, are vtterly peryſhed. Suche as remaine, as the commentaries of Julius Cæſar, Cornelius Tacitus, Diodorus Siculus, and thei that wrate of Coſmographie, haue omitted the originall beginning of the name. The hiſtory of Gyldas the Bryton can not be founde, who was after the Saxons had inuaded this roialme: and therfore mought lacke ſuche bookes, as ſhoulde beſte inſtruct hym. As for Beda ſemeth to haue ſeen nothing written of that matter. For where he ſayeth, that this yle tooke the name Britamia, of the inhabitauntes of Britayne in Fraunce, it is nothing lyke to be true. For that countrey was (not long before the tyme of Beda) named Armorica & Armoricus tractus, whan this yle was called of moſte auncient wryters Britannia, and (as Solinus wryteth) ſeemed to bee an other worlde, for as muche as the weſt part of Gallia was thought to be the vttermoſte parte of this worlde. Alſo Julius Cæſar wryteth, that the places of this yle were vnknowen to Frēchmen ſauinge to a fewe marchauntes: and yet they knewe no farther, then the ſea coaſte towarde Fraunce. Moreouer the ſame Brytons affirme, that it was left among them in remembraunce, that the innermoſte parte of the countrey, was inhabited of them, which had their fyrſt beginning in the ſame yle. This well conſidered, with the auctoritée of the wryter, both an excellent prince, and alſo a great learned man, and was himſelfe in this yle, it is not to be doubted, but that he moſt diligently ſearched for the true knowledge of the auncientée thereof. And if he mought haue founden, that the inhabitauntes had come of the ſtocke of Eneas, of whoſe progenie he him ſelfe came, he would haue reioyſed muche, for the proweſſe and valiaunt courage, which he commended in them. Moreouer, that the name came of Brutus (whom our wryters imagined to deſcende of Eneas the Troyane) is no more likely, than that this yle was called Albion of Diocleſians daughter, or of whyte rockes. Al the olde Latine hiſtorians agrée, that the ſonne of Syluius, the ſeconde in ſucceſſion from Eneas, & of them named the ſonne of Aſcanius, was Eneas, called alſo Syluius. whereunto the Grékes do alſo accorde: but they name Syluius to be brother to Aſcanius, & borne after the death of Eneas, and was therfore called Poſthumus. But neyther the Romaines nor the Grékes doe write of any man called Brutus, before Iulius Brutus, which expelled Tarquinius out of Rome. Whiche name was alſo geuē to him (by the ſonnes of Tarquine) in deriſion, becauſe they tooke him to be fooliſhe and dul witted. Moreouer, there is ſo muche diuerſitée betwéene Britannia and Brutus, that it ſéemeth againſt reaſon, that the one ſhould procéede of the other. For if Brutus had béene the geuer of the firſt name to this yle, he woulde haue called it Brutia, or Brutica, rather then Britannia, whiche hath no maner proportiō or analogie with Brutus. But now wil I (as I haue done in the word Albion) declare a reaſonable cauſe of coniecture, why this yle was named Britannia. About.30. yeres ſence, it hapned in wilſhire, at Iuy church aboute two myles from Sariſbury, as men digged to make a foundation, they founde an holow ſtone couered with an other ſtone, wherin they founde a booke, hauinge in it little aboue.xx. leaues (as they ſaide) of very thicke velume, wherin was ſome thinge written. But when it was ſhewed to prieſtes and chanons, whiche were there, they could not reade it. Wherfore after they had toſſed it from one to an other (by the meanes wherof it was torne) they did neglecte and caſt it aſide. Long after a péece therof happened to come to my handes: whiche not withſtandynge it was all to rente and defaced, I ſhewed to maiſter Richard Pace, than chiefe ſecretary to the kynges moſte royal maieſtie, wherof he excéedingly reioyſed. But becauſe it was partely rent, partely defaced and blourred with weate whiche had fallen on it, he could not finde any one ſentence perfecte. Notwithſtandynge after longe beholdynge, he ſhewed me, it ſéemed that the ſaid booke conteined ſome auncient monument of this yle, and that he perceiued this worde Prytania, to be put for Brytannia. But at that tyme he ſayde no more to me. Afterwarde, I geuyng much ſtudy and diligence to the readynge of hyſtories, conſyderynge whereof this worde Britannia firſt came, fyndyng that all the yles in this parte of the Occean, were called Britanniæ, after my firſt coniecture of Albion, remēbringe the ſayde wrytynge, and by chaunce fyndynge in Suidas, that Prytania in gréke, with a circumflexed aſpiratiō, doeth ſignifie metalles, fayres and markettes, alſo reuenues belonging to the commune treaſure: I than conceyued this opinion, that the Grékes flouriſhynge in wiſdome, proweſſe, and experience of saylynge, beynge entred into the Occean ſea, founde in the yles great plenty of tyn, leade, yron, braſſe, and in diuers places golde and ſyluer in great quantitie, they called all thoſe yles by this generall name Prytania, ſignifiyng the place, by ẏ whiche came out of it, as one would ſay, he wēt to market, when he goeth to Antwerpe, or Barrow: or to the fayre, whan he goeth to Sturbridge: or to his reuenues, whan he goeth to any place, from whence his reuenues doe come. And yet, becauſe this yle excelled all the other in euery condicion, it was of ſome priuately called Albion, that is to ſay, more happy or rycher. This coniecture approcheth more nigh the true ſimilitude, then the other inuentions, except there be any auncient hiſtory before the tyme of Geffrey of Monmouth or Beda, which may more probably confute that I haue declared. To ſuche wyll I gladly geue place. Finally I thought it alwaies more honourable, to haue receyued the firſt name by ſuche occaſion as I haue reherſed, and the generation of the inhabitaūtes of this lande, to be eyther equall with the moſte auncient, or myxed with the moſt wyſe and valiaunt people of Gréece, vanquiſhers and ſubduers of Troianes, than to take the name and firſt generation of a vayne fable, or of a man, if any ſuch were, which after he had ſlayne his father, wandred about the worlde, vncertayne where to dwel. Alſo to aduaunt vs to come of the Troyanes, cauſers of their owne countreis deſtruction, by fauourynge the aduoutry of Paris and Helena, of whom neuer procéeded any other notable monument, but that they were alſo breakers of theyr othe and promeſſe. Yet this foly is founde almoſte in all people, which contende to haue their progenitours come fyrſt from Troy. Whiche fantaſie may wel be laughed at, amōge wyſe men. The fayth of Chriſte was fyrſt receiued in this royalme, after the incarnation. 156. yeres.

See Berreck Thankes pag. 790.

Hakewill p. 9

Pius wꝛyteth in his coſmographie, that in the towne called Sancti Viti, is a greate valley, wheare, in a medowe is ſette a ſtone of marble, of a good height, whereupon aſcendeth an huſbande man, vnto whom that office by inheritance belongeth: On his ryght hande ſtandeth a blacke cowe: on his left hande an yll fauoured mare. About him ſtandeth a great multitude of carles. On the other ſyde of the medowe cometh the duke, accompanied with hys noble men in their robes of eſtate. Befoꝛe hym goeth the Earle of Goꝛitia, the great maiſter of his houſe, betwéene. xii. banners, bearynge the pꝛynces ſtanderde. The other noble men folowe with the pꝛynce, cladde lyke an huſband man, with a ſheepecroke in his hande, as he weare a ſhéepeherde. As ſone as the carle, on the marble ſtone, perceiueth him coming, he aſketh aloude in the Slauoyn tounge, who is this, that commeth with ſo pꝛoude a gate? They that ſtande about, aunſwere: It is the pꝛynce of this countrey. Than ſayeth he eftesoones: Is he a ryghtuouſe iudge, ſéekyng foꝛ the weale of the countrey, a free man boꝛne, and woꝛthy to haue honour? Is he a true chꝛiſten man, and defender of Chꝛiſtes faithe? They all aunſwere, yea, he is and ſhall be. Than ſaieth the carle, By what ryght may he putte me from this place? Than aunſwereth the Earle of Goꝛitia: Thou ſhalte haue foꝛ thy place. lx. grotes, theſe twoo beaſtes (the cow and the mare) & the pꝛynces apparaile, which he did late put of. Alſo thi family oꝛ kinne ſhalbe frée from all maner of tribute. Than the carle, geuinge the pꝛynce a little blowe on his cheeke, byddeth hym be a good iudge, and commyng downe from the ſtone geueth him place, and ſo departeth, taking with him the cow and the mare. Than the prince goeth vp on yͤ ſtone, and holding a naked ſwerde in his hande, brandyſhing it, turneth to euery parte of the ſtone, promyſyng equall iudgement to all the people. Than is there brought to hym colde water in an houſbandmans cappe, whiche he drynketh, ſignifiyng that he condêneth drinking of wyne. Cato, onis, Was not fyrſte a ſurname, but a name of merite. For the auncient Romaynes called him Cato, that was wyſe by muche experience. Of this name, two were moſte excellent: Marcus Cato Cenſorius, becauſe he alwayes vſed the grauitie and rygour that was wont to be in the correctours of maners, called Cenſores. Alſo he hymſelfe beyng Cenſor, was aboue all other moſte ſharpe and rigorous. Valerius Max. wryteth, that he was almoſt an olde man er he learned latine letters, and thã it ſéemeth he was olde er he learned gréeke. Yet not withſtanding by gathering abridgementes out of Thucydides and Demoſthenes workes, he became the greateſt oratour of his time, and was called the Romayne Demoſthenes. He beyng made Conſull, wanne moe cities in Spayne, than he had aboden dayes in that countrey. In whiche iourney he reteyned to himſelfe, nothing of all that was founde there, but meate and drynke onely. He made his ſouldiours ryche, geuinge to euery of theim a pounde weight of ſyluer, ſaiyng: Better it were, that many Romaynes retourned to Rome with ſyluer, than a fewe with golde. He taught his owne ſonne grammer, not withſtãding he had a ſeruaunt called Chylo, an excellẽt grammarian, and taught a great ſchole, ſaiyng: It is not cõuenient, if my ſonne be ſlow of learning, he ſhould be rebuked or pulled by the eares of hym, that is of a ſeruile condicion. He alſo taught him the ciuile lawes, the exerciſe of all weapons, to ryde well, to fighte with the fiſtes, to ſuſteine bothe colde and heate, to leape into waters, and ſwymme againſt ſwifte ſtreames. Being Cenſor, he ſpared none eſtate, whoſe maners he founde corrupted, or ſuperfluous in lyuing, wherby he brought into the citie a meruellous ymage of vertue. His ſentences reherſed by Plutarke be wounderfull: of whiche I wyll remembre thrée. Lyke as the diers, ſaied he, dooe die moſt often that colour, whiche they doe perceiue moſt men delite in: ſo young men do moſt ſtudiouſely haunte and imbrace that, which thei ſée olde men and counſaylours haue in moſte eſtimation. He blamed the people of Rome, for that they committed authoritie and offices ofte tymes to one perſone, ſaiyng: They ſéemed not to eſtéeme rule and authoritie, or els they ſuppoſed there were but fewe worthy of promotion. The one was a ſigne of contempt, the other diſcourage to good wittes, and rebuke to their cõutrey. Whan the ambaſſadours were choſen to be ſent into Bithynia, of whõ one had yͤ goute, an other peyne in his head, and the thirde tymorus, Cato laughing ſayd in the ſenate: The people of Rome ſendeth an ambaſſade, whiche hath neither féete, head, nor herte. The life of this & of the other Cato, are worthy to be often tymes read, ſpecially of counſailours & men in authoritie. He was before the incarnation. 182. yeres.

Cato Vticenſis (ſo called becauſe he ſlewe hymſelfe in the towne Vtica, to whom the other Cato Cẽſorius was great graundfather) ſhewed a wonderfull cõſtaunce and grauitie, euen in his childhode. Seldome mery or ſéene to laughe, and if he did, it was a very little ſmylinge: not lyghtly angry, but if he were, he was not ſone appeſed. He was very ſtudious in all moral philoſophie, practiſing in his actes and liuing, that which he radde of vertue and honeſtie: and ſtudied eloquence only to the intent, that in counſailing & reaſonĩg, he mought adde vnto philoſophy more force and ornament, & yet would he not practiſe it openly. Whan one ſaied to him, men diſpraiſe thine obſtinate ſilence, he anſwered: I force not, ſo thei diſpraiſe not my liuing: but I wil breake out of this ſilẽce, whã I can ſpeake that is worthy to be ſpoken. Being Tribunus militum, he was ſent into Macedonie, wheare with his meruaylouſe grauitie, prudence, & peinfulneſſe, he made al that were vnder him fierce and hardy againſt their ennemies, gentyll to their felowes, fearfull to doe iniurie, prompt to get prayſes, and hymſelfe labouring with theim, vſing his apparayle, féedyng and goyng lyke vnto theim: he contrary to mennes expectations (not withſtanding his ſeueritie) wan the hertes of them, going on foote and talkyng with euery man. He was of ſuch conſtancie, & ſo farre from ambition & flatterie, that neither Pompey nor Cæſar, in theyr chiefe pryde, whã all men, either for dread or fauour, inclined to their deſires, coulde perſwade him to agrée to their mindes, in caſes where it ſéemed to be againſt the weale publike: nother mought any maner menacing or dreadful tokẽs moue him from that cõſtancie. In ſo much, that whã he hearde that Cæſar had vanquiſhed Põpey, & that his frendes would haue ſent to Cæſar to deſire his fauour, he anſwered: thei which are vanquiſhed, or haue any wyſe treſpaſed, ought to make ſuite, but he in al his life was neuer vãquiſhed, & in innocencie ſurmounted Cæſar, who in making warre againſt his own cõutrey, had condemned himſelfe to haue doone that thinge, which he had often denied. Finally not for malice of Cæſar, but becauſe he would not beholde yͤ weale publike deſtroyed, he ſlew himſelfe at Vtica, hauinge with him at ſupper, the eueninge before, the greateſt officers of that citie, & many of his friendes. Alſo this ſentence being ſpoken amongeſt other: onely a good man is a frée man, all ill men are bonde: whã one happened to reaſon againſt it, Cato being therwith chaufed, diſputed with the other ſo vehemently and longe, that al men ſuſpected yͤ he would not long lyue. He died before the incarnation. 44. yeres.

The goddeſſe Aurora beynge rauiſhed with the loue of this younge mannes beautie, when ſhe coulde not eyther by fayre meanes or violence withdrawe hym from the lous of his wyfe to folowe hir appetite, ſhe ſent hym home agayne to hir wyfe in the fourme of a marchaunt, aſſurynge hym that he ſhould not fynde hir in lyke maner faithfull and true to hym. Wherfore at his comminge he beganne to trye hir, and with great giftes and lyberall promiſſes, aſſauted hir chaſtitie. Procris beynge ouercomme with ryche rewardes condeſcended vnto his requeſte. Then Cephalus takynge againe his owne ſhape and figure, greatly blamed hir lyghtneſſe and vnfaithfulneſſe. Wherwith ſhe beyng muche aſhamed and not able to cleare hir ſelfe, forſooke hir huſbande and lyued ſolitarie in the wooddes. At the length ſhe being reconciled to hir huſbande, gaue to hym the dogge Lelapa, and a darte that ſhoulde neuer miſſe thynge that it was hurled at. Cephalus hauing thoſe ſo fitte inſtrumentes, beganne to haunte the wooddes, and gaue hymſelfe muche to huntynge more then he was wonte: In ſo muche that very early in the mornyng he would leaue hys wyues company and goe into the wooddes. This vnwonted exercyſe Procris muche beganne to ſuſpecte, and thought hir huſbande to be in loue with ſome Nymphe, whoſe company to attayne, he pretended that great delyghte of hunting. Wherefore to trye this matter ſhe folowed hym into the wooddes. And Cephalus as fortune was, for heate and labour, lay vnder a tree to refreſhe hymſelfe. She therefore thinking to eſpie hym in his embraſinges, moued hirſelfe behynde a buſhe wheare ſhe was. Some mẽ ſuppoſe that there were thrǽ Graces deuiſed to ſignifie that men ought to be both boũtifull and gracious to other, and ſecõdly to take benefites at other mẽs handes, and thirdly thãkefully to requite benefites receiued: whiche are thrǽ ſundrie actes in the vſe of liberalitie. Other ſay they imagined thrǽ graces to ſignifie liberall thankefulneſſe, and that we ſhoulde plentifully requite benefite with vantage more then we receiued. Wherfore they painte the Graces in this maner, that the ones backe ſhould be towarde vs, and hir face fromward, as proceding from vs, the other twoo towarde vs: noting double thanke to bee due for the benefite we haue done. They weare alſo painted naked, to doe men to witte, that pleaſures ſhould be done vnfeinedly without cloke or diſſimulation: they weare made yonge, to note that the memory of a benefite ſhould in no tyme weare awaye and decaye: they weare deſcriued laughing, becauſe pleaſures ought to be donne with a chereful and glad minde: finally their armes weare painted as it weare linked one within an other, to teach that kyndneſſe ſhould be vndiſſoluble, and one benefite ſo to prouoke an other, as it may make the league of loue and frẽdſhip ſure & perpetual.

Cicero, ônis, m.g. The ſurname of Marcus Tullius: whoſe diuine eloquence, abundante learnynge, ſharpeneſſe of wyt, dexteritie in actes, and moſt ardent loue to the common weale of his countrey, can not be ſufficiently expreſſed by a mortall mans tounge or pen. He lineally deſcended from the auncient kynges of the Volſcians: all be it tyme and occaſion wearynge out dignities in bloud, his name continued longe in the ſtate of worſhip. His aunceſtours were called Cicerones, becauſe Tullius Appius, a noble kynge of the Volſcians, had on his noſe, a marke lyke a chiche peaſe, called Cicer. In his childehoode, he ſo excelled all other children in wytte, that their fathers meued with his fame, went purpoſely to the ſchoole to beholde and here him. He ſo profited in the eloquēce of greeke and latine, that not onely his companions were in a meruailous admiration of him, but alſo Apollonius (the moſt excellēt oratour at that time) hearing him, & not ſpeaking a great ſpace, ſaied at laſt: Truly Cicero, I praiſe thee, and meruayle at thee: but I lament the fortune of the Greekes, whan I conſider, that by thee, learnynge and eloquence, which were left vnto vs onely, are euen now tranſlated vnto the Romaines: which ſaiyng was afterwarde founde true. For looke what ſubtiltee was in Logike, what commoditee in morall philoſophie, what ſecreate knowlage in philoſophie natural, he knew it (as Tacitus writeth) and declared it in latine moſt eloquently. And he beynge but a very yonge man, came to practiſe in Rome, ſtudied abundantly the ciuile lawes, was meruailouſly occupied in great weighty cauſes. And after he was Senatour, was continually (as it ſeemed) moſt buſy about the weale publyke. Yet he that exactly readeth his workes, ſhall thinke he neuer dyd any thynge but reade great authours, and write bookes. For there was no philoſopher, no oratour, no poete before his tyme that eſcaped him, as dooeth in his bookes ſufficiently appeere. And yet how many bookes made he? ſence we haue not the thirde part of them, yet ſuch as we haue, if any man now did wryte ſo much, and ſo well, we ſhoulde thinke him to haue ſpente the more parte of his time in wrytynge. And noble Cicero, lorde god how many thinges did he exploite by his wiſedome and diligence, in moſt weighty affayres, as well in warre as peace? how dyd he by his dexteritee and prudence ſaue the citie & people of Rome from the moſte perniciouſe confederacie and rebellion of Catiline, and other of the nobilitee, whiche went about to deſtroy the weale publike, and robbe the citie? how preſerued he the ſame citie and people, after the death of Cæſar, that they weare not oppreſſed by Marcus Antonius? For his incomparable actes, the whole Senate and people gaue to him, fyrſt before any, the name of father of the countrey. What trouble and miſery ſuſteyned he, beynge exyled by the procurement of Clodius, onely for the puttynge of the ſaide rebelles to death? Such is the rewarde of people vnſtable. Likewiſe for dryuynge Antonius out of Rome, and by his ſharpe orations, cauſynge him to be proclaymed enemy to the weale publike: he made Antonie ſo much his ennemie, that in the treaty of peace betwéene him and Octauius, he demaūded Cicero, to dóe with him his pleaſure. Which thing graunted of the vnkinde Octauius (whom Cicero had brought vp, and by his meanes cauſed to be made chiefe gouernour of Rome) Antonie ſente one Herennius (whom Cicero had ſaued from death by his eloquence) to purſue him as he fled. Which thinge whan Cicero perceyued, he abode his commynge. And lyinge in an horſe lytter for weakeneſſe, he did with conſtāt eyes prepare his throate to Herennius: who did (all other men abhorryng) ſtrike of his head, & handes, and brought them to Antonie: who reioyſyng therat, cauſed the head and handes to be ſet ouer the place of ciuile iudgements of Rome, whiche dayly beholden of the Senate and people of Rome, was lamēted. He flouriſhed about. xl. yeres before the incarnation. For his life and actes reade Plutarch. de vitis. Corn. Nepos, Appian. Sabel. Apoph. Eraſmi.

Demetrius, The propre name of diuers Grekes: one a kyng of Macedonie, was of ſo goodly ſtature, excellent fauoure and beautie, that no peincter or karuer mought truely counterfeyte him. For it ſeemed, there were in his viſage both terribleneſſe & mercy, grauitie and gentilneſſe, wherewith was ioyned a princely maieſtie. He was in tyme of recreation of all kynges moſte pleaſaunt: whan great affayres were in hande, he ſurmounted all other in ſtudie, diligence, and wyſdome. He had his father and mother in wõderfull reuerence. Notwithſtanding he was muche noted of incontinencie, he was ful of proweſſe and valiaunt: he deliuered Greece from Ptholomeus tyranny, and vanquyſhed him on the ſea. He alſo ſubdued Athens, and all the coũtrey of Boeotia, with the city of Thebes. He had warre at one tyme with Ptholomeus kynge of Aegypte, Lyſimachus kynge of Aſia, Seleuchus kyng of Syria, and Pyrrhus the kynge of Epyrus, and oftentymes vainquiſhed their armies: But in concluſion, being vainquiſhed by Seleuchus, he was alſo by him cõmitted to an honorable priſon, that is to ſaye, kept in a towne of Syria, called Cheroneſus, where he had appointed vnto him fayre palaices, pleaſaunt orchardes, and gardeyns, and the company of ſuche as he lyſted: where, with ydelnes and exceſſe of voluptuous pleaſure, he fell ſicke and died, of the age of .lxiiij. yeres.

Demetrius Phalareus, A noble philoſopher and oratour, diſciple to Theophraſtus, of whom Tullie ſaieth: he was a ſubtyle diſputer, but no vehement oratour, yet was he ſweete and delectable. For his excellẽt vertues he gouerned the Atheniens tenne yeres. And becauſe he had greatly enriched the citie of Athens in yerely reuenues, and adorned it with commodious buyldyng, the people in the honour of him did ſet vp.300.& 60. of his ymages, made in metall. But afterwarde being abſent, by the meanes of certaine enuious perſons, the people condemned him to die, and alſo pulled downe his ymages, ſome they brake, ſome they ſolde, onely one was kepte whole in the caſtell, whereof Demetrius hearing, ſayde: yet haue they not plucked downe the vertue, for whiche they did ſette vp theſe ymages. This mã cauſed Ptholomeus kyng of Aegipt, to make his great librarie, and to ſende to the Iewes to haue their lawes & prophecies trãſlated into Greeke, who ſent vnto him of euery trybe, twelue great learned men, who did accompliſhe his deſyre, and are called Septuaginta interpretes, although there were of them .lxxij. perſons. Dionyſius, Reade in Bacchus. It is alſo the name of two kynges of Sicilie, which for their crueltie & auarice were called tyrãnes: the firſt was ſonne to Hermocrates, a riche man of Sicilie, whom for his valiauntneſſe in armes, the Sicilians ordeined to be their capitaine againſt the Carthaginiens, which inuaded theim, & menaced to deſtroy their countrey, and take from theim their libertie. But after the enemies were vãquiſhed, Dionyſe, which preſerued his countrey from bõdage, of a benefactour became a cruel tyran. The other Dionyſe was ſonne vnto this, like in conditions, but better learned. He alſo made meanes to haue Plato come vnto him, & a good ſpace had him in muche reuerẽce, and heard his leſſõs in philoſophie. Finally, ſuſpectinge that he conſpired againſt him with Dion and other, whom he had expelled, vnneth at the deſire of Architas prince of Tarentum, and other, he ſuffred hym to returne to Athẽs. Of both theſe ye may reade in Plutarke in the life of Dion, alſo in Juſt. li. 21. and many thinges notable in Eraſmi Apoph.

Epaminondas, A Theban borne, (ſonne of an honeſt gentyll manne called Polymnus) in ſundrie qualities excellent, as wel of the bodie as of the mynde, in all kyndes of muſyke perfectly inſtructed, and danced exceadingly well. He wraſtled, and ranne no man better. In armes ſtronge, hardye and valiaunt. In martiall policie, equal to any than lyuinge: wounderfull well learned in philoſophie, eſpecially in that Pythagoras taughte, the moſt diffuſe and pure doctrine, conteining moſt ſecreate & diuine miſteries, wherunto he added moſte noble vertues. For he was temperate, wyſe, of great grauitie, vſyng tyme wyſely, of corage inuincible, ſo diligent in obſeruyng trouth, that he woulde at no tyme lye, neyther in earneſt nor in game. He was continent, mercyfull, wonderfull pacient, ſuffering wronges both of the people, and of his friendes. He was ſecreate and truſty, ſo faythfull and louynge to his friendes, that whan any of theim were takẽ in warres, or any of their daughters ready to bee maried, and they not able to ſette them forth, accordyng to their degrées: he would aſſemble the reſidue of his friendes, and exhorte theim to geue vnto hym that lacked, according to their powers; He himſelfe woulde liberally geue to the quantitie of his ſubſtaunce, whiche was but little, although he were in great authoritie (for he refuſed all rewardes, ſauynge thankes onely) & whan he hadde made a good ſumme of that, whiche was graunted, before he receyued it, he broughte hym that ſhoulde haue it, vnto the geuers, that he moughte receiue it of theim, and knowe how much he was bounde vnto euery of theim. He oftentymes refuſed great ſummes of money and ryche preſentes ſente to him by princes (although he were poore) ſaiyng: If the thing were honeſt which he was required to doe, he would dooe it becauſe it was good, without any rewarde: If it were yll, or not honeſt, all the goodes of the worlde ſhould not make hym dooe it: If it weare profitable to his countrey, he was bounden and ready to dooe it freely: If it weare otherwyſe, all the rycheſſe in the worlde moughte not counteruayle. the loue that he bare to his commune weale. In eloquence no Thebane mought be compared vnto hym, and his ſentences weare graue, and veray compendious, wherby in counſayles he vanquiſhed and put to rebuke greate and famous orataurs. In battayle he ouercame the Atheniens and the Lacedemonians, and in one day had the victory of all Gréece. At the laſt, in the battayle at Mantinea, betwéene the Thebans and the Lacedemonians, he was ſtriken & wounded to death with a longe ſpeare, the head remaynyng ſtyll in his bodye: yet reteyned he lyfe, vntyll it was tolde hym that his hoſte had the victorie. Than ſayde he, I haue lyued longe enough, for I dye vnvanquyſſhed. The yron being drawen out of his bodie, he died, before the incarnation of Chriſt.372.yere. This one thing is well to be conſidered (as Probus ſayeth) the citee of Thebes, before Epaminondas was borne, and alſo after he was dead, was vnder the rule and inſubiection of other people. But durynge the tyme that he was a gouernour in the weale publyque, the citie was head and gouernour of al Gréece: wherby it may be wel perceiued, that ons ſuche noble man is more than a whole citie.

In phiſike he was ſo excellent, as he may iuſtly ſéeme to be rayſed by diuine prouidence, at that time to make perfecte that noble arte, and to confounde the manyfolde ſectes and errours, with whiche as then it was defaced. Untill he was. xv. yeres of age, he was brought vp by his father in grammer, logike, and arithmetike. Afterwarde he gaue himſelfe to more graue ſtudies of philoſophy, ⁊ therein meruailouſly profited. So ſone as he was. xvii. yeres olde, his father was by a dreame admoniſhed to ſet his ſon to the ſtudy of phiſike: in which arte within few yeres he ſo notably preuailed, that he not onely paſſed all his equalles in learning, but, with the admiration of all men, his maiſters alſo that taught him. When that in Gréece none could be founde at whoſe hande he might farther learne, he trauailed ouer many countreyes to learne ⁊ vnderſtand the nature of ſimples ⁊ other mattiers perteyning to the ſcience that he profeſſed. After his ſundry trauailes, by that he was. 28. yeres of age, beynge well furniſhed with many profitable ſimples, he returned to his countrey Pergamus, alway indeuouryng to make other partakers of thoſe thinges, that by his great labours he himſelfe had learned. By occaſion of a ſedition raiſed in his countrey, after few yeres he went to Rome, where, by his great learning ⁊ meruailous cures that he wrought, he procured fauour ⁊ loue of good men, ſpite ⁊ enuie of the malicious, but the admiration of all that knewe him, both good ⁊ euil. Until he was. 28. yeres olde he was of body much in daunger to ſickneſſe. All the reſidue of his lyfe, by good order and diete, he continued in moſt perfite health, onleſſe it were ſometime the grudgeyng of a feuer for a dayes ſpace. In wytte and reaſonynge he was ſharpe, earneſt, and ſubtile. In maners ſo courteis, milde, and gentill, that he neuer corrected his ſeruauntes, otherwyſe then with modeſte chaſtiſynge in woordes. Towarde his patients comfortable, pleaſaunt, and pitifull. Of ſuch conſtancie and grauitie, that he with lyke ſtaye and moderation of mynde dyd alway ſuſteyne aduerſytie and proſperitie, honour and reproch, loue ⁊ diſpleaſure. So little he eſtéemed vaine glory, ẏ he would not haue ſet his owne name to ẏ moſt famous workꝭ ẏ he wrate of all partes of phiſike. In teachinge his arte and ſcience, beſide his notable eloquence and learning, he vſeth ſo excellente order and methode, that his workes are wonderouſly eſteemed of al that know what learning meaneth. So much he tendred his owne natiue countrey, that he choſe rather in his later time to liue there in meane eſtate, thē with the emperours of Rome in great eſtimation and dignitie. In fine he dyed, beynge of age. 70. yeres, or as ſome wrypte. 140. and floriſhed eſpecially in the tyme of Marcus Antoninus, Commodus, and Pertinax the emperours, about the yere of our lorde. 160.

And for his incomparable ſtrengthe and labours (taken for the common profitte of mankynde) he was named alſo Hercules. All be it Beroſus affirmeth Hercules to be the ſonne of Oſyris, and kyng of Aegypte, and was called Hercules Libycus, becauſe he conquered Libya. Sainct Hierome on the tenth chapiter of Geneſis wryteth, that this Hercules perfourmed the twelue notable laboures, whiche poetes wryte of, and not Alcides, ſonne of Alcmena. The firſt labour (as Diodorus wryteth) was the ſleayng of a lyon in the woodde Nemea, that farre exceaded all other Lyons in greatneſſe, whiche mought not be ſlayn with metall, nor ſtone: wherefore he was conſtrayned to ſlea him with his handes. The ſecōd labour was the kylling of Hydra the monſter, in the fennes of Lerna, whiche had an hundred neckes with ſerpentine heades, and whan one was ſtriken of, there did aryſe eftſones.ij.other heades. The thirde labour was the taking of the great wylde bore of Erymanthus, whiche waſted the countrey of Arcadia, and all people drad him. But finally Hercules toke hym alyue, and bearing him on his ſhoulders, brought him vnto kyng Euriſtheus. The fourth labour was the battaile whiche he had alone with the great nōbre of men called Centauri, that weare of great ſtrength and ſwifte as horſes: all theim he ſlew, whan they aſſaulted him. The fifth was the takyng of the great harte in rēning, which for his ſwifteneſſe had his hornes gylted. The ſixt was the deſtruction of the byrdes Stymphalides, which conſumed the fruites and grayne of the countreis adioynyng The ſeuenth was the makyng cleane of the oxe ſtalle of Augea kyng of Elis, whiche would receiue.3000. oxen at once, and had not béen clenſed or ridde in.30. yeres: ſo that it myght ſéeme vnpoſſible to haue it clenſed: the whiche not withſtanding Hercules perfourmed by wyſdome, conueighing into it the ryuer Alpheus: whiche by the ſwyft courſe of the ſtreame, in one daye caried awaye the dounge, without any reproche vnto Hercules. The eight was the bryngyng of a Bull from Creta into Gréece, drawyng him along the ſea. The nynthe was the takyng of Diomedes kyng of Thracia, and caſtyng hym to his horſes, who féeding them with mans fleſhe, was himſelfe of them deuoured. And after Hercules breakyng thoſe wylde horſes, and makyng them gentill, brought them to Euriſtheus. The.x.labour was his voyage into Spayne, and ſleaing of Geryon and his ſonnes, and takyng the great kyne, whiche he gaue to a kyng in that countrey, who continually afterwarde, did yerely offer in ſacrifice, to the honour of Hercules, one of the bulles, that came of thoſe kyne. The eleuenth was his goyng into hell, & fetchynge thence Theſeus and Pirithous, and bryngyng with him in a chayne Cerberus, the dogge of hell, hauyng thrée heades. The twelfth and laſt labour was the takyng of the golde appulles, out of the gardeynes Heſperides, and ſleayng the terryble dragon, whiche continually watchyng kepte thoſe appuls, whiche were called golden for the beauty of theim. Some ſaye they weare ſhéepe, whoſe flices were of the colour of golde, and the dragon ſignifieth the diligence and ſtrengthe of the ſhéepeherde, whiche kepte theim. Theſe were the twelue labours of Hercules, whereof grewe this prouerbe.

Herculei labores*, where the labours dooe ſéeme impoſſible to be atchieued.

Herculis cothurnos*, was uſed for a prouerbe, wherein a thynge of lytle importaunce was ſet forth with great eloquence or other thynge ſolemne, more apte for a greater matter, as one ſhould put Hercules hoſen on a chyldes legges. Wherwith accorded the ſaiyng of the wiſe king Ageſilaus, whan one commēded to hym a Rhetorician, whiche by his crafty eloquence made trifles & ſmall thynges to ſéeme great, The king aunſwered: That ſowter deſerueth no praiſe, which putteth a great ſhoe on a very litle fote: meaning thereby, that the wordes ſhoulde as well accorde with the mattier, as the garment with the perſon. This is ſo common a vice now a dayes among ſtudentes of eloquence, that in wrytinge and ſpeakyng, they ſéme to prepare the hoſe before they knowe the meaſure of the legge, wheron they wyll put it.

Hercules Gallus, As Lucianus wryteth, was in the olde tyme in Fraunce an ymage made lyke an olde man, with a balde head, and vnkempte, his heare very whyte, the ſkynne of his face ryuelled, and as it were burned with the ſunne, wearyng on hym a Lyons ſkynne, and bearyng in his righthande a great clubbe, in his lefte hande a bowe, a quiuer at his backe, drawynge after hym a multitude of people, tyed by their eares with a little chayne wrought with aumbre and golde, but they weare ſo eaſyly tied, that laughyng and with good chére they willingly folowed, and as it ſémed, woulde not be louſed: and the other end of the chayne was tied at Hercules tongue, who looked towardes theim with a laughing countenaunce. This ymage ſignified eloquence, whiche for the puiſſaunce thereof, reſembled rather Hercules thā Mercurie. And his age betokened, that for the moſte parte eloquēce is ſubſtantiall and vehement. That Hercules, or rather eloquence draweth men by the eares tied to his tōgue, ſignifieth the affinitie betwéen the tongue and the eare: and their glad and voluntary folowyng, ſignifieth with what delectation eloquence draweth men vnto hir perſwaſions and exhortations.

Hippias, A Rhetorician (as Apuleius ſaieth Floridorum. 2.) excelled all menne in the multitude of craftes, and was equall to any man in elequēce. He came on a tyme to Piſa, to the great triūphe called Olympicum, and euery thynge that he did weare vpon him, was of his owne makyng, his ſhoes, patens, and coate wrought of the fyneſt threede, with three threde ſtitches, a baudrike of baudken, with chaungeable colours and ſundry pictures, a mantell of whyte ouer all, a rynge on his fynger with a ſtone, wherin was a ſignet moſte perfealy wrought. All this did he worke with his owne handes. Alſo he caried with him a little oyle bottell, with a narrowe mouth, and the reſidue rounde and flat, with a little inſtrumente to ſtryke ſweate from his body hangyng therat. He played excellently on euery inſtrument, and ſange his owne verſes in all kyndes, whiche no man coulde amende. In all partes of logike, rhetorike, and philoſophie, he vanquyſhed many, and was vanquyſhed of none. He ranne, wraſtled, & did other feates of actiuitie, that all men beholding hym were therewith abaſſhed. Finally, he ſeemed not to be ignorant, weake or vnable in any thyng. Not withſtanding Plato in two dialogues bryngeth in Socrates diſputing with him. In the one in ſearchyng what beautie is, in yͤ other what a lie is, he concludeth and proueth Hippias to be an arrogant and ignorant foole, for as muche as prayſing beautie, he wyſte not what beautie was, and boaſtyng that he before any other mā could diſcerne a lyer from a true man, he coulde not make of them a definition. By this it appeareth howe muche the common iudgement of men varieth, and is inferiour to the iudgement of a perfecte wyſe man, as Socrates was.

Midas, The ryche kynge of Phrygia, who, for his fryndly intertaynement of the God Bacchus, being willed to wyſhe what he woulde, with promyſe preſently to obteyne the ſame, deſyred that what ſo euer he touched myght forthwith becomme golde. By whiche wyſhe graunted, he tourned caſtelles and towers into golde. But when he came to eate his meate, and ſawe that it alſo was made golde, being almoſt famiſhed, he beſought Bacchus agayne to take from hym the graunt that he hadde geuen hym. Bacchus therefore wylled hym to goe waſhe hymſelfe in the ryuer Pactolus: wherby the couetous king waſhed away his golden wyſhe, and the ryuer euer after had ſmall ſhardes of golde appearing in it. Afterwarde when the ruſticall God Pan, chalenged to contende in muſike with Apollo, and Tmolus the iudge appointed of that controuerſie had geuen ſentence on Apollos ſyde: All other that weare preſent dyd alowe his iudgement as good and true, onely kynge Midas reproued it, and in his eſtimation preferred Pan with his ſcreakyng pypes. Wherewith Apollo beynge very wrathe, in reproche of his groſſe iudgement, made him to haue long eares lyke an aſſe. But Midas kepte them ſo ſecreat, that neuer man knewe it, ſauynge onely his barbour. Who not able to conceale ſo vncouthe and ſtraunge a thing, and yet not ſo bolde to publyſhe it for feare of the kynges diſpleaſure, went into the fielde, and diggyng an hole in the grounde, cried out Auras aſininas habet rex Midas, that is, true it is that kynge Midas hath longe eares lyke an aſſe. In proceſſe of tyme reedes dyd growe in that place: whiche, when they weare blowen with the wynde, dyd yelde the ſame voyce that Midas his barbour hadde there vttered, and ſo (ſaye poetes) became it firſt knowen, that Midas had an aſſes eares. Oedipus, Sonne of Laius and Iocaſta, whoſe father vnderſtanding by oracle that he ſhould be ſlaine of his owne ſonne, committed him being an infant, to his ſhéepehearde to kyll him. But he being moued with pitie, and yet not ſo bolde to refuſe and diſobey his maiſters commaundement, made holes through the chyldes féete, and by a wythe hunge hym on a trée, by that meanes thynking that he would die for hũger. At which tyme happily one Phorbas kynge Polybius his heardman of Corinthe hauing occaſion to paſſe that way, hearyng the chylde crye, ſaued it, and brought hym as a great preſent to the quéene his maiſtres that had no childe. She eſtéeming it to be ſent hir of god by miracle, for that it was ſo goodly a babe, brought it vp tenderly as hir owne, and of his ſwollen féete called him Oedipus. He commyng to age, and vnderſtandynge that he was not Polybius his ſonne, determined to goe ſéeke his father. Wherefore learnyng by oracle that at Phocis he ſhould méete with his father, he paſſed thither, and at his comminge fyndyng the people of the citie in an vprore and tumulte, as it fortuned he tooke parte with certaine, and vnwares kylled his owne father Laius, who was come thither to quiete the ſeditiõ. And ſo was the oracle fulfilled that ſignified he ſhuld light on his father at Phocis. Then thinkyng himſelfe to be deluded by the oracle, he wẽt to Thebes. Wheare, becauſe he was thought to be Polybius his ſonne, and had diſſolued the riddle of Sphinx, he was made kynge of Thebes, & vnwittingly maried the quéene Iocaſta his own mother, and had by hir foure chyldren. Finally hauing knowledge at length that by miſfortune he had murdered his father at Phocis, and by inceſte had knowen his owne mother, ſo ſore it gréeued him, that in reuengemẽt thereof he pulled out his owne eyes, and lyued euer after in banyſhment, hauing his daughter Antigone to leade hym, by whom he was often times preſerued, when he would haue ſlaine hymſelfe.

Origenes, called alſo Adamantius, (borne at Alexandria in Aegypte) Was ſonne of one Leonides the martyr, a man of moſte excellente doctrine and vertue from his childehoode: who beynge on ſleepe, his father came into the chamber, and takynge awaye the clothes ſoftely, kiſſed the breaſt of the infant, as a temple, hauyng within it the holy ghoſte, and gaue thankes to god, that he had geuen him ſuche a ſonne. Whan his father was martyred, Orygen beynge but a yonge childe, and yet deſyrous of martyrdome, ranne amonge other that weare ledde to bee ſlayne, and by all meanes profered himſelfe to die with them. But his mother (who loued him moſte entierly) perceyuynge the mattier, dyd firſte lamentably intreate him to withdrawe him, but his deſyre of martyrdome was the more encreaſed therby. Wherefore in the night when he was in his bed, ſhe ſtale away his clothes, ſo that in the mornynge whan he woulde haue gone forth, he might not come by them: wherefore he was conſtrayned to tary at home. Of the whiche deceipte of his mother, he complayned to his father in pryſon, deſyringe him to perſiſte conſtantlye in his good purpoſe. After the death of his father, he gaue himſelfe continuallye to the ſtudie of holy ſcrypture, whiche he had taſted before by his fathers inſtruction. And yet, before he was. xx. yeres olde, he excelled all men of his tyme, as well in philoſophie, as all other ſciences. At the age of. xviii. yeres he expounded gentile authours openlye, wherein he ſo enterlaced the holy ſcripture, that he conuerted many greate learned men to the fayth of Chriſte. His lyuynge was ſo ſtayte and vertuous, that he drewe many vnto him, and was amonge all men had in a woonderfull reuerence. He neuer ceaſſed in all perſecutions to comforte and confyrme men in the embracynge of martyrdome, and dydde continually reade openlye, and alſo wryte innumerable bookes in the expoundynge of holy ſcripture. He wente into dyuers countreis to preache, and for his greate fame, Mammea the mother of the noble emperour Alexander Seuerus, ſente for him to Rome, and hearde him, and (as ſome ſuppoſe) was by him conuerted. He obſerued all the preceptes of the goſpell moſte ſtraytely, in continuall faſtinges and watchinges, hauing but one garmente, goynge alwaies barefoote, counſaylynge all his hearers to renounce all that they had, and to geue it in almeſſe. Alſo he gelded himſelfe, not onely to be the more chaſte, but alſo (becauſe in the time of perſecution, he taught the woorde of god, as well pryuyly as openly to men and women) to lette the paynyms to ſpeake diſhoneſtee of him, and thoſe that repayred to his ſermons and leſſons: whiche althoughe he dyd ſecreately, yet god woulde not haue it hyd, ſo that it came to the eare of Demetrius the byſhop of Alexandria, who, firſt woonderynge at the ſtomacke and vertue of the man, prayſinge the feruentneſſe of his faythe, ſayde vnto him: Now ſticke to thy doctrine and preachynge, ſence thou haſt lefte vnto thyne aduerſaries none occaſion of ſuſpitiō. But afterward the ſame Demetrius ſtyrred with enuie, layed it in reproche againſt him openly, fyndyng nothyng elles wherewith to diſpraiſe him. He that wyll knowe more of Origen, let him reade the vi. booke De hiſtoria Eccleſiaſtica, and ſaincte Hierome De ſcripto. eccleſi. He was after the incarnation of Chriſte. 204. yeres.

Palamedes, The ſonne of Nauplius king of Eubœa, a great ennemie of Vliſſes, by whom in the ende he was in falſe iudgement condemned and ſtoned to death. For when al the princes of Gréece weare appointed to goe to Troy, Vlyſſes, loth to departe from his new maryed wyfe, feygned himſelfe madde, and the more to make men beleeue it, he yoked beaſtes of dyuers kyndes, and ſowed ſalte. But Palamedes to try his craftie diſſimulation, layed his yonge ſonne Telemachus in the way as the plough ſhould goe, whõ when Vlyſſes perceiued, he lifted vp the plough, that he might not hurte him. Wherby his diſſimulation beynge perceiued, he was taken to Troy whether he woulde or noe. In diſpleaſure of this and certaine other matters, Vlyſſes beynge at Troy counterfaiteth letters from Priamus to Palamedes, wherein he gaue thankes for treaſon that he condeſcended vnto, and made mẽtion of a great ſumme of money that pryuily he had ſent him. Which ſũme of money, Vlyſſes corruptynge the ſeruauntes of Palamedes, had cauſed to be hydde in the grounde in his tente. When theſe letters weare apprehended and openly redde, and Palamedes accuſed of treaſon, Vlyſſes ſeemeth to take parte with him, and earneſtly to affirme that he was gyltleſſe, and the letters counterfayted, and that the ſame might eaſyly be tryed, if they did ſearch his tente. For if there weare founde any ſuche ſumme of moneye, as the letters ſpecified, then Palamedes woulde confeſſe himſelfe to be gyltie, if not, as he was ſure they ſhoulde not, that then it might well appeere he was vniuſtly accuſed. But whẽ this ſearche was made, the money was there founde dygged in the grounde, and Palamedes therevpon condemned, and by the whole armie ſtoned to death. This man is reported to haue inuented certayne letters of the Greeke croſſe rowe, and alſo the game of cheſtes, and maners of weightes and poyſes, and fyrſt to haue applyed the yere to the courſe of the ſonne, and monethes to the courſe of the moone. Spaniardes, and wonne 250. walled townes, & not withſtanding returned to Rome, not one grote the rycher: for he was lyberal and ſumptuous, and not very riche. Afterwarde he made warre againſt the Ligurians, whiche were about Ieane, where hauynge with hym but onely. 8000. he put to flyghte. 30000. and brought them to ſubiection. Finally, he fought againſte and vanquyſſhed Perſes kynge of Macedonia, and brought hym and his chyldren pryſoners to Rome, and tryumphed in this fourme. The Senatours apparayled in whyte ſylke, ſatte at ſtages about the market place, to beholde the tryumphe: all the temples were ſet opē, and filled with flowers and ſwete perfumes: the triumphe was diuided into three dayes. The firſt daie vnneth ſuffiſed to the beholdyng of ymages, as wel peincted as wrought in ſtone and metal, by moſt excellent workemē, whiche were caried in. 250. charyottes. The ſeconde daye was brought foorth the harneys and artyllary of the Macedons, and the apparayle of horſes, whiche was in ſuche ſorte, that it was in a maner terrible to the vāquiſſhers to behold. After folowed. 3000. men, whiche bare ſyluer coyne in. 350. veſſels of ſyluer, euery veſſell being in weyght three talentes, whiche was. 240. li. after. 80. li. to euery talente, euery veſſell was borne of foure men. Other dyd beare great cups and pottes of ſyluer. The thyrde daye the trumpettes came before blowyng bloudy ſoundes. After theim came. 120. oxen, their hornes gylte, and therevpon were ſet fillettes and garlandes, and were led with yonge men, gyrte and prepared to ſacrifice them: and chyldren bare cuppes of golde and ſyluer, to ſerue to the ſacrifice. After them folowed they that bare money of golde in golden veſſelles, euery of theim weyghynge three talentes. Alſo the nombre of the veſſelles were. 240. Than folowed they that caried the potte, whiche Aemilius had let make all of precious ſtones, weyghyng tenne talentes, whiche was. 800. li. Alſo they that bare all the plate of the kynges Antigonus, Seleucus, Thericius, & Perſes, whiche was innumerable. After came the chariot, wherin was Perſes harneys, with his diademe ſet thervpon. Soone after his twoo ſonnes, and one daughter led, and wyth theim a great nombre of nourryces, maiſters, and gouernours, weeping and holding vp their handes to the people. Whereof many were moued to teares, ſo that the triumphe ſeemed to bee mingled with gladnes for the victorie, with heauyneſſe for compaſſion. After his chyldren and ſeruauntes folowed forthwith Perſes in a blacke garmẽt, tremblyng & troubled in ſpirite: whom inſued a great company of his counſailours and officers, beholding him ſorowfully with teares, whiche more conſtraygned the Romaynes to weepe, for pytie that they hadde of their miſery. After him were borne foure hundred crownes of golde, whiche were gyuen to Aemilius by the cities of Greece for his vertue and prowesse. Thã folowed Aemilius himſelfe, ſitting in a chariot, veray rychely apparayled, hauing a robe of purple tinſet, and bearyng in his hande a braunche of laurelle, as a man beſide that honour worthy to be looked on. Than after came the men of warre, whiche had been with hym, in order of ſuche bendes and companies as belonge to battayle, euery of theim bearynge in his hande a braunche of laurelle, and ſingyng verſes myxte with mery tauntes: Some ſingyng the prayſes of Aemilius, whom they beholde, and woundred at for his excellent qualities. But now beholde, Aemilius being in that ſtate and condition, that nothing lacked in him that man coulde wyſſhe for: yet his lyfe was not without aduerſities.

He hauing fower ſonnes, of the whiche he had giuen twoo in adoption to Scipio Affricanus, & Fabius Maximus: the other twoo he kepte at home with him: The one of theim died. v. daies before the triumphe, beinge ſixtene yeres olde: The other beynge twelue yeres olde, dyed the thirde daye after the triumphe. The whiche crueltie of fortune all men lamented, that hadde brought ſo great heauineſſe into the houſe replete with ſuche gladneſſe, reioycing, and noble renoume, and had meddled teares, ſorowes, and lamentation with victorie, ioye, and triumphe. But therefore Aemilius neuer abated his courage, but calling the people together, made to theim a noble oration, declaringe that he was nothyng deceyued by fortune, for as muche as when ſhe ſeemed to him moſt fauourable, he thã more feared hir than any thyng elles: And although ſhe had taken from hym good ſonnes, whom he appointed to ſucceede him, yet ſince ſhe had ſhewed hir extreame malice to hym and his bloud, he had good hope nowe, that the people of Rome ſhould remayne proſperouſe without any perill. O noble herte, O valiaunt courage, worthy to be left in remẽbrance. He brought ſo much gold & ſiluer into the treaſorie of the Romaines, that there needsd no taſke to be ſet on the people. lxxx. yeres after and aboue: yet he left in patrimonie vnneth. 592. li. and in treaſure littell or nothyng. This hiſtorye I haue wrytten for the notable thynges therein conteigned, with the vnſuretie of proſperitie, wherin al men are blinded, that deſyre to haue it. One thyng would be remembred. Although Aemilius were a fauourer of the nobilitie, yet was he better beloued of the people, than was Scipio, who onely ſtudied to ſerue their purpoſes. For his humanitie equally mixte with grauitie, he was brought to the earth, not with ſumptuous preparation, but with loue and fauour, not onely of his countrey men, but alſo of his ennemies. For as many of Liguria, Spayne, and Macedonia, as were than at Rome, they that were yonge and ſtronge dyd beare the corps, the olde men folowed, callynge him benefactour and conſeruatour of their cities and countreis.

Paulus, The apoſtle of Chriſte, borne in Iudea, in a towne called Giſcalis, of the tribe of Beniamin, the towne beyng taken by the Romaynes, went with his parentes to Tarſus a citie of Cilicia, & dwelled there. But afterwarde he was ſent by theim to Hieruſalem to learne the lawes, and was there taught of one Gamaliel, a great learned man. He being with other at the martyrdome of ſainct Steuen, receiued letters of the biſhop, willyng hym to goe to Damaſcus, there to perſecute theim that beleued in Chriſte. And in the waye, he was by reuelation chaunged, from a perſecuter to a veſſell of election. Afterwarde when he had conuerted Sergius Paulus (than beynge Proconſull at Cypres) to the faythe of Chriſte, by hym he was called Paulus, where before he was named Saulus. Fynally, he ſuffered martyrdome by beheadyng, after the paſſion of Chriſte. xxxvij. yeres, and the. xiiij. yere of the reigne of Nero. Hæc Hieronymus & ſophronius. The reſidue of his lyfe appeareth in the actes of the Apoſtles. His learning and miſticall wyſedom, is well ſhewed in his epiſtles, in the whiche (as ſainct Peter ſayeth) be ſome thynges harde to be vnderſtande, and that men vnlearned and incõſtaunt dooe depraue, lyke as they dooe the other partes of ſcripture, to their owne perdition.

Pericles, A noble and valiaunt capitaine of the Atheniens, excellent in witte and naturall eloquence: he was inſtructed in philoſophie by Anaxagoras, ſo that therby he atteined vnto meruaylous great knowlage, noble courage and pacience, in ſo muche that whan a lewde perſon folowed him to his houſe, reuiling him al the way: whā he was come to his dore (than being night) Pericles commaunded one of his ſeruauntes to take a torche, and bring him (who had rebuked him) home to his houſe. Alſo he beynge in great eſtimation and authoritie among the people of Athens, would neuer be at any feaſtes or bankettinges, nor receyue of any mā, any preſentes or giftes, nor did goe to euery aſſemble or councell, or beyng there, did ſpeake or reaſon in euery matter, but reſerued himſelfe to thinges of very great importaunce. And yet ſéemed he than to be very timorouſe. But yet his eloquence was ſo excellent, his voyce and pronunciation ſo pleaſaunt, his ſentences ſo pondorouſe & vehement, that he neuer ſpake, but that therto al men conſented. And therefore it is written of him, that he did fulminate his wordes, that is to ſaye, that they procéeded from hym as thunder, and lightnynge. He was of ſuche temperaunce, that although he ſéemed to haue all the Atheniens at his commaundement, yet he neuer increaſed his owne reuenues the worthe of one farthyng, but augmented the commune treaſure excéedingly. And ſuch ſpoyle as came to his part in yͤ warres, he did employe vpon grayne and vittayle, diuidyng it among the people in the tyme of neceſſitie. He was vnfortunate onely in his owne children, his eldeſt ſonne Xantippꝰ perſecuting him with ſundry diſpleaſures, and openly mockyng hym. Notwithſtandinge (as it was reaſon) he died miſerably before his father. Finally Pericles being ſycke vnto death, the noble men came to comfort hym, ſpeakyng ſoftely they communed of his prowes, where he had victory in nyne great battayles. He hearing what they ſpake, ſayed vnto theim: that he much meruailed, that they ſo greatly extolled that thyng, whereof the more parte perteyned to fortune, and had happened to diuers other capitaynes as well as to hym, and that they ſpake nothing of that which was moſt to be praiſed. For neuer man, ſaied he (by myne occaſion) had cauſe to put mournynge garment vpon him. Plutarchus in vitis. He was afore the incarnation of Chriſt. 441. yeres.

Philippus,i, A kyng of Macedonie, ſonne of Amyntas, father of great Alexander: A prynce from his chyldehodde of excellente wytte and power, of whom theſe notable thynges be remembred. After he had vanquyſſhed the Atheniens at Chæronea, he began to reioyce of his felicitie. But to the entente that he therefore ſhould not be the more prone to iniuries towarde his ſubiectes, nor to haue indignation at theim, whom he vãquiſſhed: he then and euer after cauſed a chylde to come to his chaumbre doore in the morninge, and to ſaye aloude, Philip, thou art a man mortall. Whiche he obſerued ſo conſtantly, that he neuer went out of his chambre, or receyued any counſaylous or ſuiters, tyll the chylde hadde thryſe ſpoken theſe woordes, not withſtandynge that he was a Painime. Alſo where one named Machætas, hadde a mattyer in variaunce before hym, Philippe takynge lyttell heede, what was ſpoken, and ſometyme ſleeping, at the laſt gaue iudgement againſt Machætas: who crying out with a loude voyce, appealed. Wherwith Philip beig ſore moued, with a greeuouſe looke, ſaied: to whom doeſt thou appeale? I appeale, (ſaid Machætas) vnto your ſelf, but beynge better awaked, & taking heede what is ſpoken. Philippe being throughly awaked, and hearing eftſoones the matter, perceiued that Machætas had wronge, and woulde not reuerſe the iudgement, but the ſumme of money, wherin Machætas was condemned, he payde of his owne treaſure. In this man it is notable howe ſundrie vertues were tempered with diuers vices. He was a prynce more geuen to coſtly prouiſion of warrefare, then ſumptuouſnes in banketting: and therfore his greateſt riches was in the fourniture and habilimentes of warre. He was more cunning to get ryches, then circumſpect to keepe theim: and therfore, not withſtãding his continual ſpoyles, he was alway needy. Mercie and treacherie in like maner he eſteemed. No way ſeemed to him diſhonorable, wherby he might attain victorie. Faire language he would vſe, where occaſion ſerued, and likewiſe pretend diſpleaſure, where he hated not. In talke and cõference craftie, & more would promiſe in wordes then in deede perfourme. Very ſkilfull bothe in pleaſaunt ieſting, and alſo earneſt debatinge of weightie affayres. Frindſhip he meaſured more by profite, then by faithfull dealing. To pretend fauour where he hated, and to ſette hatread betweene frindes, ſeeking for fauour on both ſides, was his common cuſtome. With theſe thinges, was ioigned ſo excellẽt language and vtterãce, as neither readineſſe of tongue wanted fine ornamentes of eloquence, neither flowyng ſpeach ſharpe inuentiõ of wittie matter. In warrefare ſubtile & guilefull, wiſe in counſayle, deſyrous to be loued, & well able to repreſſe his anger: ſomewhat to muche geuen to drinking, and vpon the heate therof diuers times in warre would fierſly ſet vpon his enemies, and offer himſelfe to more daunger thẽ needed. Wherby he was often wounded, and in perill of his life. By theſe properties he layde the foundation of that empire of the worlde, whiche afterward was made perfite by his famous ſonne Alexander: who was both in vertues and vices more notable then euer his father was. He was afore the incarnation of Chriſte. 358. yeres.

Phocion, Diſciple to Plato and Xenocrates, one of the chiefe gouernours of the citie of Athens, a manne of ſuche wounderfull grauitie and conſtancie, that he was not lyghtly ſeene to chaunge his countenaunce, either to laugh or to mourne, nor to haue his handes out of his habyte, excepte in warre: and whan he was in the countrey, he went alwaye barefooted, except it were in the colde wynter, whereof there was no better token, than to ſée Phocion goe ſhodde. His ſpeche was ſhorte, graue, vehemente, and full of quicke ſentences: and therefore the moſt eloquent oratour Demoſthenes called him the hatchet that did cutte of his woordes. He was of ſuch a conſtancie, that where Apollo at Delphos made aunſwere, that one man in Athens was of a contrarie opinion to all the citie: whā that was reported, Phocion roſe vp and ſaied: Leaue countreymen to ſearche whom your god meaneth: for I am that one man, whome nothyng liketh, whiche is nowe doone in the common weale of this citie. Whan he had made an oration to the people, and they prayſinge hym conſented to hym, he turned to theim that were next him, and ſayed: Alas what haue I doone, I feare leſt ſome foolyſhe worde hathe eſcaped me vnwares: ſignifiynge, that the people ſeldome allowed any thyng that was good, or not foolyſhe. On a tyme whan he reaſoned contrarie to the mynde of the people, wherefore they murmured, and woulde haue let hym: It is at your pleaſure countreymenne, ſaied he, to compelle me to doe that that I woulde not, but to ſpeake otherwyſe then I thynke, that no man lyuyng can cauſe me. He was ſo reuerend a perſonage, that the great kynge Alexander, in the beginnyng of his letters, after he had vanquiſhed Darius, ſaluted no man but him, and Antipater. He refuſed infinite treaſure ſente vnto hym by Alexander, and although he had béen the generall capitaine of the Atheniens in ſundrie warres, and honourably atchiued his enterpriſes, yet was he beſte content to lyue poorely. Finally, he was of his vnkynde countreymen condemned to death, wherto he wente with the ſame countenaunce that he hadde in auctoritie. Whan one, whiche was condemned with hym, lamented and feared to die, Phocion turnyng to hym, ſayed: why, arte thou not glad, that thou ſhalt dye with Phocion? And whan one of his fryendes aſked hym, if he woulde any thynge to his ſonne: I would (ſaied he) that ſuche wronge as the Atheniens doe to me, he ſhould not remembre. What a wounderfull worde of a Paynim was this? Who folowed Chriſtes doctrine ere Chriſte was borne. 333. yeres.

Pieria coming thither with hir mother, one Phrygius, the eldeſt ſonne of Nebeus duke of Miletus, beholding hir beautie, began to loue hir exceedingly, and after the maner of louers, deſiring to doe ſome thyng thankefull to the mayde, demaunded what he might doe to hir moſt pleaſaunt and acceptable. The mayden being witty, and alſo louing to hir countrey and friendes, aunſwered that to hir it ſhould be the greateſt pleaſure, if he would endeuour himſelfe to bring to paſſe, that ſhe mought oftentimes, with a great ſorte of hir companiõs repaire to Miletus without any damage. Phrygius perceiuing, that nothing mought ſo muche content the mayden as peace, he calling the people together, exhorted them to cõclude a peace wͭ them of Myos, to be with them in aliance: wherunto they accorded, and the name of Pieria was euer after in ſo honorable a remembrance, that all honeſt women vſed for a prouerbe, to wyſhe ſo to be loued, as Phrygius loued Pieria.

Plato, The prynce of all philoſophers (in wyſedom, knowledge, vertue, and eloquence, farre excēdyng all other Gentyles) was borne in Athens: his father was named Ariſton (of an auncient & honourable houſe) his mother Parectonia, deſcēded from Solon. Liyng in his cradell, bēes were founden to bring hony into his mouthe, without hurting the childe: whiche diuinours did interprete, to ſignifie, that from him ſhould flowe eloquence moſte ſwēete and delectable. Socrates dreamed, the night before he was brought to him to be inſtructed, that he helde betwēene his knēes a whyte cygnet, who hauinge feathers quickely growen, flewe vp towarde heauen, and filled the ayre with moſte ſwēete tunes: So the daye after, Plato being brought by his father, Socrates beholdynge hym well, ſayed: This is the byrde, whoſe ymage I behelde the laſte nyght. His name was firſte Ariſtocles, and after called Plato, becauſe (as ſome ſuppoſe) he was broade in the ſhoulders: other wryte, becauſe he had a broade viſage. In his youth he exerciſed wraſtlyng and other feates of actiuitie: and tyll he was. xx. yeres olde, he gaue himſelfe to make amorous verſes, which, after he came to heare Socrates, he threwe into the fyre and burned, and than moſte ardently and attentiuely hearde Socrates doctrine, durynge the tyme that he lyued. After that, he not onely hearde the moſte famous philoſophers and Geometricians in Gréce, but alſo wente into Italy, into Affrike and Aegypt, to here the miſticall ſciences. And it is thought, that he hearde ſome of the prophetes, ſence there bee founden in his workes ſentences not abhorrynge from our catholike faithe. He was experte in martiall affayres, for he had fought in thrée great battayles. He choſe a place by Athens, called Academia, where he taught: and therefore his diſciples weare called Academici. There was in him a meruailous ſharpeneſſe of witte, with an incõparable dexteritée in diſputynge, and makynge of aunſweres: his conſtancie, temperaunce and grauitee, with courteiſie in language, weare of all other incomparable: he was ſo deſyrous of knowlage, that he was no leſſe ſtudious to learne, then he was to teache. Wherefore beynge ſcorned of one, whiche aſked of him, howe longe he woulde be a ſcholer, ſo longe (ſayde he) as I repente not to be wyſer and better. He is called diuinus Plato, for his excellente doctrine, whiche conteineth many thinges (as ſainct Auguſtine ſaith) whiche accorde with holy ſcripture: ſo that therein is perceyued the firſt parte of Geneſis, vnto Spiritus domini ferebatur ſuper aquas, and the miſterie of thrée perſons in diuinitee is there expreſſed. Pompeius, Called Magnus for his incomparable victories (whoſe father was called Pompeius Strabo) had ſo good a grace in his viſage, that from his childehoode, he meued the people of Rome moſte entirely to fauour him for his ſingular beneuolence, continencie of lyuynge, martiall experience and knowlage, pleaſantneſſe of ſpœche, fidelitée of maners, and eaſineſſe in ſpeakynge to. He neuer requyred any thynge without ſhamefaſtnes, nor graunted any thyng but with a glad countenaunce: in his viſage appœred alwaye both nobilitie and gentleneſſe, ſo that in his floriſhynge youthe, there ſhyned in him maners both princely and reuerende. Sylla, the cruell & proude tyranne hadde him in ſuche eſtimation, that where he would not aryſe to any other mā, were he neuer ſo highe in dygnitée, he met with Pompeius commynge towarde him, and puttynge of his bonet, ſaluted him by the name of great capitayne, called in latine at that tyme Imperator. He triumphed for his victories in Affrike, beynge almoſte a childe, not yet admitted into the Senate, contrary to the auncient order of Rome: he vanquiſhed the valiante capitaine Sertorius, a man at that tyme moſte famous in prowеſſe,

proweſſe, beynge an exyle in Spayne, and before inuincible. He alſo vanquiſhed Mithridates, the greate kynge of Pontus: and where a greatte numbre of the concubines of Mithridates, women of excellente beautie, were taken & brought vnto him, he woulde not companie with anye of them, but ſente them to their friendes. He ſubdued theſe realmes, Armenia, Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, Media, Cilicia, Meſopotamia, Iudæa, Arabia, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, and Syria: for the whiche he tryumphed, after he had twyſe before tryumphed for the wynnynge of Spayne & Affrike. In this triumphe, he brought into the common treaſure, of golde and ſyluer, in money and plate. 2000. talentes, whiche if they weare common talentes, amounted to. xx. hundred thouſand pound: if they were the great talentes. xxvii. hundred and. xxvi. thouſande. 600. xl. li. xiii. s. iiii. d. in our money: beſydes that was geuen to the men of warre, whiche had ſerued him, and that was to euerye one a 1500. braſen pence, of our money. vi. li. v. s. whiche in ſo greate an hoſte as perteyned to the cōqueſt of ſo many countreis, extended to a wonderfull ſumme of money, whereby may appeere the rycheſſe of the Romaines. Afterwarde by the mediation of the friendes of bothe parties, Pompeie tooke to wyfe Iulia, the daughter of Iulius Cæſar, whiche lyued not longe, and the amitee betweene Pompeie and Cæſar decreaſed, and at the laſt, the vnſatiable ambition of them bothe braſte out, the one not ſuſtaynynge the others honour, whereof came the warre ciuile, wherein Cæſar with a fewer number vanquiſhed Pompeie, who priuily fledde by ſea into Aegypte, where vnder the ſaulſe conducte of the kynge Ptolomeus, he was ſlayne in a bote, his head beynge ſtryken of, and his bodie caſte on the ſtronde, where it was porely buryed, when he had lyued. lx. yeres and aboue, and from his youth in moſte hyghe honour, wealth, and proſperitee, on whom it dyd ſeeme that fortune had powred all hir treaſure moſte prodigally.

Pomponius Atticus, An honorable Romayne, of a gentle and auncient houſe, from his childehood amiable of viſage, with a ſweete voyce and pronunciation, and therwith hauinge a ſharpe wit and apte vnto learnynge: for the diuiſion and partes takynge at Rome, he wente and dwelled at Athens, where the people moſte tenderly loued him, as well for his honorable vertues, as for his benefites towardes them: for beynge lefte ryche by his fathers ſubſtaunce and great reuenues, he oftentimes relieued the neceſſitees of the common people. Wherefore he was there had in a ſingular reuerence: and for his abode in Athens, and excellencie in their eloquence, he was called Atticus. He dyd not onely with his treaſure keepe the people out of vſurie, but alſo in a tyme of ſcarcitie, he gaue to euery citizen. vii. meaſures of wheate, called Medimni, whiche was of due meaſure. v. buſhelles and an halfe, one pecke, one gallon, and one quarte to euery one. Sylla, notwithſtandynge his great pryde, had him in reuerence. He moſte loued Hortenſius & Cicero, princes of eloquence: and although he himſelfe weare aſwell in the Latine tounge, as in Greeke, perfecte as anye man, yet woulde he neuer practiſe in mattiers, nor woulde aſke or ſue for auctoritee. He releeued with his money contrary partes, as Antonius and Brutus, one to the other mortal ennemies. He lent great ſummes of money without takynge of vſurie, and holpe ladies, whoſe huſbandes weare baniſhed, as well with money, as with his counſayle and conſolation. Of Pompeie and Cæſar he was equally loued, when they weare ennemies together. Finally, his quiet lyuing was to no man anoyaunce, but to euery man thankefull. His houſe was pleaſaunt and not magnifyke, neate, and not verye ſumptuous: all his ſeruauntes weare very well learned, red well, and wrate very fayre, nor there was ſo ſimple a boye in the houſe, but he coulde doe bothe: the reſidue weare artificers, ſuche as made thinges neceſſary and conuenient for his houſe. Whan Auguſtus Cæſar moſte flouriſhed, he made aliaunce with him for his excellent temperance & honeſtie in lyuyng, for the which all noble men fauoured him. Alſo he maryed his wyues ſonne Tiberius (who was afterwarde emperour) to the daughter of Atticus, and no daie eſcaped that the emperour wrote not vnto him, ſemblably dyd Antonius the emperours ennemie: ſuch grace had he to be fauoured of all men, to lyue out of the daunger of enuious authoritee, to paſſe his time in the moſt delectable paradiſe of knowlage, and to haue as well thereof abundauntly, as alſo lyuynge ſufficiente for the maintenance of his eſtate beynge a knight, and to ayde his friendes and countreymen in their neceſſitie. When he had lyued. 77. yeres, he dyed of a fiſtula, with a woonderfull pacience, and voluntary abſtinence, and was buryed at Rome, all good men folowinge the corps, & the people and all other lamēting. He wrate diuers excellent workes in Greeke & Latine, which are periſhed, to the ineſtimable detrimente of them that be ſtudiouſe.

He was the fyrſte that named himſelfe a philoſopher, where before men of great learnynge weare called wyſe men: and becauſe he would eſchewe the note of arrogancie, when one demaunded of him what he was, he ſaied, Philoſophus, whiche ſignifieth a louer of wiſedome. He was in ſharpeneſſe of wit paſſyng al other, and found the ſubtile concluſions and miſteries of arithmetike, muſike, and geometrie. Plato wondreth at his wiſedome: his doctrine was diuine and compendious: the whiche he teachynge to other, enioygned them to keepe ſilence fiue yeres, & heare him diligently, ere thei demaũded of him any queſtion. He neuer would doe ſacrifice with any bloudde, he would eate nothyng that had lyfe, and lyued in a meruailous abſtinence, and continence, and was in ſuch authoritie amonge his diſciples, that when in diſputation they mainteyned theyr opinion, if one demaunded of them, why it ſhoulde be as they ſpake, they woulde aunſwere onely, Ipſe dixit, he ſayed ſo, meanynge Pythagoras: whiche aunſwere was reputed as ſufficiente, as if it hadde beene proued with an ineuitable reaſon: ſo muche in eſtimation was he for his approued trouth and incomparable learnynge. He was noted to be experte in magyke: and therefore it is written of him, that nygh to the citie of Tarentum, he beheld an oxe bitynge the toppes of beanes there growinge, & treading thē downe wͭ his feete: wherefore he bade the heardeman to aduyſe his oxe that he ſhoulde abſteyne from grayne: the heardeman laughyng at him, ſayed, that he neuer learned to ſpeake as an oxe: but thou (ſaide he) that ſeemeſt to haue experience therein, take mine office vpon thee. Forthwith Pythagoras went to the oxe, and layinge his mouth to his eare, whiſtered ſomewhat of his arte. A meruaylous thinge, the oxe, as if he had beene taught, lefte eatyng of the corne, nor neuer after touched any: but many yeres after myldely walked in the citie, and toke his meate onely of them that woulde geue it him. Many lyke wonderfull thinges are written of him. Fynally his diſciples, for theyr wyſedome and temperance, weare alwaies had in greate eſtimation. He was before the incarnatiō of Chriſt 522. yeres.

Rómulus, As the Romayne ſtories affyrme, the ſon of Mars, by Ilia the daughter of Numitor, but more verily the ſonne of Amulius his great vnkle, who, of purpoſe rauiſhed Ilia in the darke, beynge a virgine Weſtale, to haue a quarell to put hir to death. For kynge Numitor had a brother named Amulius, of nature wicked, fierſe, and cruell, who, not beynge contente to take the kyngdome from his elder brother, and caſt him in pryſon, dyd alſo murder his ſonne Lauſus, and vnder coulour of honour made his daughter Ilia a virgine Weſtale vnder the bond of perpetuall chaſtitée, that ſhe might not haue any iſſue. But ſhe beynge afterwarde founde with childe by Mars, (as the Romaynes would haue men beléeue) was deliuered of two ſonnes: whiche Amulius commaunded to be caſte into Tyber, and theyr mother, accordynge to the lawe of the Weſtales, to be buryed quicke. Hott

As it happened at that tyme, the ryuer of Tyber was ſwollen ouer the bankes, ſo that men coulde not come to the déepe of the chanell. Wherefore they that had the charge of drownynge the children, caſte them into the lande fludde, where the water ſodeynly fallynge, lefte them alyue, and ſo weare they founde by Fauſtulus the kynges ſhéepehearde, who broughte them home to be kept and nouriſhed of his wife Laurentia, whiche, becauſe ſhe was a ſtrumpette, was named of the ſhéepeheardes Lupa. Whereof roſe the fable, that the founders of the Romaine citie weare nouryſhed of a ſhee woulfe. When theſe children came after to age, beynge inſtructed by Fauſtulus of theyr ſtocke and begynnynge, they gathered together a bande of ſhéepeheardes, kylled Amulius, reſtored Numitor to his kyngedome, and on the mounte Palatine, where they weare broughte vp, beganne to builde them a new citie. And becauſe they weare twynnes bothe of one age, there fell controuerſie betwéene them, whiche ſhoulde géeue name to theyr newe citie. This contention ſo grewe, from woordes to tumulte and ſtrokes, that in the byckeryng Remus was ſlayne. Althoughe the more common opinion be, that he was put to death, becauſe ſcornefully he leapte ouer the newe walles of the citie. Romulus, beynge then kynge alone, peopled his citie, by erectynge a ſainctuarie for ſaulfegarde of all trangreſſours that would come thither: ordeyned an hundred Senatours called fathers: procured wyues for his people, by rape of all the maydens of the countrey, reſortynge thyther to ſolemne games and playes: ouercame the people of Cenina, and ſlue theyr kynge: vanquyſhed the Sabynes, and people of Atemna, and receyued theim into his citie, with other dyuers valiaunte actes. Whiche, when he hadde done, on a tyme callynge an aſſemblie at the marrice named Caprea, in a greatte tempeſte ſodaynely was gone, no man coulde tell howe: as it was thoughte, for his ſterne gouernemente murdered pryuyly of the Senatours, who, to pleaſe the people fayned, that he was a god, and named him Quirinus. Under whiche name the Romaines euer after worſhipped him.

The excellencie of this man in his arte, howe it was eſteemed and fauoured of all the Romaynes, it appéereth well, in that they gaue to him for a continuall ſtipende, one thouſande of theyr grotes for euery daye: whiche amounteth of our money to ſyxtéene pounde, thyrtene ſhyllynges and foure pence. And Lucius Sylla beynge Dictatoure, gaue to him a rynge of golde, whiche was the token of a knyghte at that tyme, as a coller or chayne of golde is at this tyme.

Wainfletus, A wourthy byſhop of Wyncheſter, and in his tyme Chauncelour of Englande, of counſayle wyſe, graue, politike, well learned himſelfe, and bothe in his tyme and after a great mayntainer of learnyng. He lyued in the troublous tymes of kyng Henry the ſixte, and Edwarde the fourth, in great eſtimation with the one, and in great diſpleaſure with the other: and therfore felte both the ſweete of proſperitie, and the ſower panges of aduerſitie. In his latter time, when he had attained quietneſſe, as a good byſhop, more myndyng the increaſe of learnyng then his owne priuate wealth, to the great furtheraunce therof, he builded the notable houſe of Marie Magdalene colledge in Oxforde. Out of the whiche, as a ſingular nourſerie of goodde letters, within fewe yeres haue been ſent into the churche, beſyde a great numbre of other wel learned, aleuen byſhops: and at this daye hath trauelling in the vineyarde of Chriſte, and plãting of his wourde, twoo godly byſhops, and diuers other zelous and very well learned. In this houſe becauſe I alſo was broughte vp in my youth, and by the benefite of the founder therof, attayned the ſmall portion of learnyng that god hath ſent me, I ought and doe acknowledge my ſelfe muche to be bounden to hym.

Wallia. The countrey of Wayles on the weſt ſyde of Englande, ſo lyyng out into the ſea, that it is compaſſed about with the ſame, ſauyng onely on the eaſt part: where, about Herefourde it is ioyned to this royalme, as a portion or member of the ſame, differing only in name and language. They be the remaynes of the olde Britones, that firſt inhabited this Ilande, and by the Saxones, when they grewe here of great power, weare conſtrayned to take that parte, as the moſt ſafe from the inuaſion and diſquieting of their enemies. This haue I here put, not becauſe I thynke it is vnknowen to any Engliſh man, but to take an occaſion to clere my ſelfe of an vniuſt and falſe ſuſpicion, that by malicious and naughtie tongues hath been ſpredde of me, as though I ſhould not beare good mynde vnto that countrey, and that I haue wrytten againſt it in a Chronicle, that before tyme I haue ſette forth. If this vntrue ſurmyſe had ſtayed within the compaſſe of the common ſorte, I would not ſo muche haue paſſed for it (although I haue been manaſed dainger by them that neuer ſawe me): but ſo, ſo muche as I heare it is crepte to thoſe that are both ryght honeſt and very wourſhipfull, I am conſtrayned in this place ſomewhat to touche it. What the thynge is, that particularly thei are graued with, or how this matter firſte beganne, I knowe not. If any ſhall declare it vnto me, I will be gladde to ſatiſfie him. In the meane time I proteſt, I neuer had cauſe to hate them, and indeede doo ſo fauour theim, as my countrey men and faithfull ſubiectes vnder one prynce with me. If I haue vſed any terme, that to them may ſeeme vnpleaſant (as in notyng the actes of Edwarde the firſte, remember I call them vnſtable) I truſt ſobre and wyſe men wyll take that, as the truthe is, to be taken vpon occaſion of thinges doone at that time onely, and not as a propertie adnexed to the people. And yet is that not my terme, but Fabian alſo, whom in ſome parte I folowed, vſeth the ſame. Not withſtanding, I thinke he ment none otherwyſe then I dyd, that is, ſo to call them there, becauſe in that one kynges reigne they ſundrie tymes moleſted hym. But that is aboue 250. yeres ſens.

Xenophon, A philoſopher of Athens, diſciple of Socrates, and was alſo a noble and politike capitaine, who for his moſte delectable ſtyle in wrytinge, was named the Muſe of Athens. He made moſte excellent warkes, replenished with ſuche kynde of wyſedome and doctrine, that to the inſtruction of a prince, none may be compared vnto hym. Wherfore I would exhorte all noble mẽ to reade his warkes ſtudiouſly. I would god that he mought fynde a tranſlatour either in Latin or Engliſh, whiche coulde expreſſe ſufficiently the moſt delectable ſentences cõteined in Gréeke.

This wish was fulfilled in the fourth yeare after: ..

Xenophontius, a, um, Of Xenophon.

Xerxes, A great and famous emperour of Perſia, ſonne of Darius, in ryches and power of men farre paſſing all other, but in noble prowes and vertue muche inferiour to his predeceſſours. Fiue yeres continually he made prouiſion for a voyage into Gréece, to reuẽge that great reproch and ouerthrowe, that his father, not many yeres before, had taken of Miltiades in the fieldes of Marathon. Wherefore, hauinge gathered together an armie, as ſome wryte, of ſeuentéene hũdred thouſand, or, as other more credibly affirme, of 1000000. He conueyghed it ouer into Europe by making a bridge ouer the ſea at Helleſpont with his great multitude of ſhippes. Through this his huge and mightie power he bare himſelfe ſo proudely, that he did not onely thynke al men ought to obey hym, but commaunded the ſeas alſo to bee quiet, and mountaynes to geue place vnto hym. The multitude of his armie & cattayle dranke certayne ryuers drie, & at their princes commaundement did cutte downe the mountayne Athos in Thrace, that they myght that way haue paſſage. Notwithſtãding, ſhortly after, this mightie prince with all his power, on the ſea by the ile of Salamine ioygning battayle with the ſmall nauie of the Grecians, was diſcomfited and put to flight, a great part of his armie deſtroyed, and himſelfe for his ſalfegarde with great feare gladde to flée in a fiſher boate vnknowen: and ſo with muche diſhonour retourned home into Perſia. Wheare, afterward, miſtruſting the haſarde of warre, he gaue hymſelfe to delitious & ſenſuall lyfe, propoſing large rewardes to ſuch as did deuiſe any newe fantaſie of riote to pleaſe his ſenſuall appetite.
